understood that no man is to be let out. It was admitted, however, that a trade might be made, and that news of it might come at any minute.

"Eld" Elberfeld and Williams have been mentioned as particular stars who may be asked to play ball with another club. McGuire's name has also been circulated. There is no more competent short-stop in either league than Elberfeld, when he wants to play ball exclusively. The fans may be wrong when they say the "Kid" is a trouble-maker; but it is certain he is always in twouble.

Then, what can you expect from a player who, when he goes to the bat and is told by his manager to do a certrain thing, curses the menseer and deliberately does what he is told not to do? Elberfeld is the fastest, speediest and safest infielder in either league when he plays real ball, but it is significant that he has more errors on the official score book than any player in either league this season—and the official score is usually notoriously lenient about marking up errors.
